

Beautiful Black Man

Beautiful black man
You are as pure as the Earth
Your elements, separately brilliant
Forge a being to marvel
Wonderfully made in His likeness
Yet humble to your creator
How great and valuable is your substance

Beautiful black man
You are gold
Ductile, you are bent but not broken
The rock of your family
You carry the world on your back
Stretched thread thin and yet you shine
How highly sought and precious is your strength

Beautiful black man
You are a sparkling sugar
Your sweet presence redefines
As your affection covers the most bitter of circumstance
Sincerity pours from your heart like honey
With a touch that is of natural delight
How melting and indulging is your love

Beautiful black man
You have the eyes of diamonds
Leading to a soul so pure
Unbreakable within and illuminating without
So gentle is your countenance, yet so firm are your principles
Your luster of integrity no matter which way you are cut
How rare and alluring is your spirit

Beautiful black man
You flow like water
Constantly moving in a divine purpose
Replenishing your surroundings

Wisdom sees her reflection in you
And you are a reflection of God
How refreshing and powerful is your mind

Beautiful black man
You are clearly defined
Your composition holds without aid
And nothing can mask your brilliance
Likened to the purities of the Earth
Look and see
Alone, you are enough

*This poem is an excerpt from With Open Eyes: A Poetic Journey through Love by Leah Cast. Outskirts Press. All Rights Reserved. Copyright © 2011 Leah Cast*